13. Audit Scotland report: 'Enabling digital government'

There was submitted a report (issued) dated 17 July 2019 by the Assistant Chief Executive, advising the Committee on the issue of an Audit Scotland report titled 'Enabling digital government' which advised members:

- (1) that in June 2019, Audit Scotland published a report titled 'Enabling digital government';
 - (2) that digital technology has the potential to help make public services better for Scotland's citizens. The Scottish Government set out an ambitious new digital strategy for Scotland in 2017. Building a digital government is an important part of that vision and is challenging, requiring all public bodies to work together. Some good initiatives have been introduced to enable change and there are examples of progress, but these are at early stages;

30 August 2019

- (3) that the Scottish Government needs to demonstrate more effective strategic leadership to encourage and promote digital government. It could do more to support organisations across the public sector to work more collaboratively with each other and with the third sector and industry. This might include establishing effective cross-sectoral forums to plan, share knowledge and information, and identify how different programmes interact with each other. The Scottish Government plays a leading role in identifying common platforms for use across the public sector, and in considering how best to deliver these;
- (4) that the Scottish Government does not have a complete picture of what has been achieved across the public sector so far, including which actions have had the most impact and where there are gaps in progress. And it does not know how much public money is being invested across the public sector to achieve the strategy's actions, or what is needed to fully deliver on its ambition. This means it cannot properly prioritise the work that will make the biggest impact on public services and learn from experience;
- (5) that the shortage of specialist digital skills makes prioritising limited resources more important. The Scottish Government provides digital guidance to public bodies, such as involving users in service design, but needs to more effectively anticipate and plan for the increased demand for new digital skills that new approaches create. The Scottish Government has developed training for existing staff and created new career paths, but a significant skills gap remains; and
- (6) that a new digital assurance framework is helping individual projects to address the risks historically faced by public sector ICT projects, but the Scottish Government has not had enough staff to share common lessons learned. Its Digital Directorate has not effectively prioritised which projects it can make the biggest difference to, or clearly communicated what support it can offer. It introduced new procedures to improve how it prioritises projects during 2018.

After discussion and hearing further from Mr Wylie on SPT's Digital Agenda, the Committee noted the contents of the report and the Audit Scotland report titled 'Enabling digital government' and noted that an update on SPT's Digital Strategy will be presented to a future meeting.
